

STEPHEN RYAN

Mr. Ryan is a citizen of the United Kingdom, and was born in the year when England last won the football World Cup. He studied at Oxford University and at the Ecole Nationale d'Administration in France. After working in the British civil service in London, and in the British Embassy in Paris, he joined the European Commission in 1996. Most of his time there has been spent in the Directorate General for Competition, first as a casehandler in the financial services sector, then in the international relations team, responsible for relations between DG Competition and the OECD, the International Competition Network, and the competition agencies of the CIS countries. He has contributed to the Oxford University Press book, "the EC law of competition, second edition" on financial services (2007).